

He put together Tabby, realized the edges did not line up, meaning the PCB stuck out in the corners. He got frustrated, laid in bed, looked at a bare PCB, noticed the cutouts could fit M3 screws, decided to do a version held together by those with the edge of the case extending past the PCB—also a tiny lip to hide it.

He started one of those, walked to Ace, talked to Hannah on the phone, bought a tool for metric hex bolts, went to Izzy's, ordered a latte, drank some on the porch, walked to Meyers, was pleased with his print results. Aside from a bath, he worked on that until Hannah came over around 10. They laid in bed together, made love. The final bottom piece came off the printer at 2AM.

Ross got up around 10, made coffee, designed a custom wedge for Tabby, went to the back yard. He forgot to extrude-remove the SKUF shape, did another wedge, had a feeling it might work, sent it to the printer, made more coffee, drank it in the back yard, printed another, continued drinking on the couch, assembled the keyboard, closed his design programs, did a Monkeytype, wrote in his journal.¹²⁰⁶

Ross took some pictures, walked up to Taco Billy, took more pictures, ate, was joined by Hannah, took more pictures, caught a ride to Meyers, laid down for a nap.⁴³⁷

He made a half-coffee, walked to Odd's, wasn't feeling the vibe, continued to Izzy's, ordered an Americano, drank some on the porch, walked down to Middlemont, had a long but productive rehearsal with Ryan, Melissa, Hannah, Uncle Bellah, June, got in the Space Bug, rode to the Hop, bought a cookie and some SoCo ice cream, went to Liz's house, hung with her and Rachel H., drove himself to Meyers, added a Slab spacer to Tabby 1.2, went to sleep.
